Table Notes

¹ Subprocessors referencing this footnote have access to (a) customer information that you share explicitly in the course of a support case, including any troubleshooting material (e.g., log files, screenshots), and (b) contact, billing, and account information on file or shared with the support team. In the course of resolving a support case, only the support agents assigned to your support case will have access to project metadata and project telemetry and only while it's relevant to the troubleshooting.

Technical Support Services refers to technical support services, as detailed in the Technical Support Service Guidelines, including 24x7 phone, chat and email support, response, diagnosis and resolution services, incident tracking and response to customer queries.

Google Group Subprocessors

Google has engaged and authorized the Google group entities below for one or more of the following activities, which may involve the processing of Customer Personal Data:

- providing service support and IT-facility management (monitoring and supporting data centers and maintaining equipment);
- providing software engineering, software maintenance, systems maintenance, including managing the availability, latency, scalability and efficiency of Google services; and
- providing customer outreach and support.

The scope of the authorized activities of a particular entity may be further limited and conditioned in each instance as determined by Google and consistent with the Data Processing Amendment.

In the table below, entities operating principal software engineering centers are indicated in bold and entities that engage personnel that provide service support and IT-facility management are marked with an (*).

- BOLD = principal software engineering centers
- (*) = IT Facility management
